SCHOLIUM HI. The Demonstrations of N. 859. 860. 862. IN the Application of the Theory, explained in the foregoing Scholium, which is very universal, there often occurs a great Difficulty; because we have to do with the Curves, called Mechanical Curves; and then, if we tend to the Arithmetical Expressions by Algebra, we must for the most part have recourse to the infinite Series. Yet in some Cases all is performed by Geometrical Lines, as will appear by the following Examples. Let us consider the right Cylinder, moved according to the Direction of 2. its Axis, running perpendicularly against the Surface of a soft Body. The Line of the Figure is a right one parallel to the Axis; such also is the Line of the Cavity; we represent both these by the same a C. We - 871. suppose AE to represent the Velocity, with which a Body projected comes to the Surface of the soft Body, and that the Line of the Velocity is BME, whose Ordinate, as H M, follows the subduplicate Ratio of the Rectangle IHCB; But this Rectangle is every where as the corresponding Absciss; therefore the Square of the Ordinate is as the Absciss, which is a Property of...
