British rule and British justice. Secondly, it taught the British Government that the East India Company, which had done good work in its time, had outlived its vocation, and could no longer be allowed to govern India through its Board of Directors and officials. On November 1, 1858, all power was taken from it, and old John Company died a natural death when Queen Victoria was proclaimed Sovereign of India--taking the title of Empress--in 1876. Our army was reorganized, and at the present time the Indian native troops are in a high state of efficiency, and their loyalty may be absolutely relied on, though never again will they be allowed to have such supreme command of the arsenals and guns, or to be in such a dangerous majority over the English regiments in India. With the British Crown as sole authority, India now became a part of the Empire in name as well as fact. Lord Canning, a calm and just man on the pattern of an old Roman Consul, became first Viceroy, and he gave justice to India instead of the vengeance clamoured for by some who were maddened by the atrocities of the Mutiny. I will not govern in anger, he wrote. Justice, and that as stern, as inflexible, as law and might can make it, I will deal out. But I will never allow an angry or incriminating act or word to proceed from the Government of India as long as...
