When on the pallid cheek the last rose fades, And death the lustre of the bright eye shades; O may that friend at. midnight duly come To shed the tear of friendship on my tomb; At that still hour with skilful hand to twine A mourning garland to adorn my shrine; Upon the lonely spot in sorrow gaze, Where the souls ruind tenement decays; And while unbidden sighs his bosom rend, Murmur with faultring voice-- Here lies my friend! And say, celestial friend, propitious powr, Wilt thou attend in lifes last fleeting hour; The struggling pangs of death wilt thou console, And kindly cheer to heavn the parting soul Oh, yes, thou wilt! my gasping breath shall bless Thy powr divine, thy soothing aid confess! And when, uplifted on thy airy plume, My soul emerges from terrestrial gloom, Oh, let her enter paradise with...
