She partook large ly of her mothers characteristics, and sought to walk closely in her steps as a friend to the sick and suffering; and by such self-forgetful devotion to others, and to the members of her own family, she broke down a naturally fine constitution, and died somewhat prematurely, soon after her father. Nothing could ever induce her to leave her home where she thought she was so much needed, and where she cherished her sister so lovingly, and nursed her father so tenderly, after her mothers death. Fitted to grace almost any position, she was content to remain where love and duty kept her, though her duties were humble and her life uneventful. Still where such grace as humility, and charity, and fidelity are duly prized, she has doubtless found fit promotion. July 12, 1809; died Nov. 26, 1810. Nov. 18, 1812; m. Harriet Taylor.
