GRIN Verlag Nov 2009, 2009. Taschenbuch. Book Condition: Neu. 232x149x22 mm. This item is printed on demand - Print on Demand Neuware - Seminar paper from the year 2007 in the subject English Language and Literature Studies - Literature, grade: 1,0, Ernst Moritz Arndt University of Greifswald (Department for English and American Studies), course: Historical Linguistics and Medieval English Studies, language: English, comment: Paper written in English. Other languages of sources/works cited: Latin, Old English., abstract: Much time and ink has been spent on the study of the so called Beowulf manuscript which nowadays constitutes the presumably 'most discussed' (LUCAS 1990: 363) Old English manuscript. Contained in this manuscript is the apocryphal Letter of Alexander to Aristotle that will be central to this paper. The multitude of medieval manuscripts (cf. GUNDERSON 1980: 48) of the Letter leave little doubt that it certainly belongs to some of the 'most successful literary impostures of the medieval ages' (RYPINS 1971: xlivi). However, its Anglo-Saxon version 'has excited little attention over the years' (ORCHARD 1995: 116). Scholar's interest seems to have been much more with the study of the earlier Latin form of the manuscript (RYPINS 1971: xxx): the Epistola Alexandri ad Aristotelem, which seems to derive from an older Greek version (cf. GUNDERSON 1980: 48). The version of the Letter dealt with here is a copy of an earlier (and apparently lost) Old English translation of the Latin Epistola: Thus 'it is at least twice removed from the Latin' (Rypins xxxvii). It is my purpose to show within this paper that neither the various monstrous beings (vs. SISAM 1962: 96) nor their 'aggression as a particular problem for foreign rulers' (vs. POWELL 2006: 1) that are most commonly said to be the connecting theme of the 'community of manuscripts' of the Norwell...
